

The Language and the Texts

Mon of Darius—Column III, Behistun (6th century B.C.)

The Language

Avestan

Avestan, the language of Zarathushtra's revelation, belongs to the Indo-European family of languages and is a sister language to Sanskrit. Zarathushtra's hymns seem to have been transmitted orally from generation to generation for nearly two thousand years. It is believed that there was no Avestan script during that period in ancient Iran. Through the millennia, however, the corpus of Avestan literature increased and the language itself underwent certain philological changes. As a result of this, all the post Gāthic compilations came to be known as part of the Younger Avesta. The corpus of all the literature—the Avesta—was probably first committed to writing during the latter half of the mid-Sasanian period.

Old Persian

Old Persian also belongs to the Indo-European family of languages and is a cousin language to Avestan. It became the official language of the Achaemenians (550-330 B.C.) from the 6th century B.C. onwards. The cuneiform inscriptions of King Darius I (522-486 B.C.) which are to be found at Behistun in Iran, are in Old Persian.

Middle Persian (Pahlavi)

Pahlavi is one of the Middle Iranian languages which developed from Old Persian during Sasanian times (224-651/2 A.C.). It has a polyphonic alphabet of 14 basic letters which were derived from an earlier Aramaic alphabet also used by the Achaemenians. It is believed that the development of the Middle Iranian languages started from the 3rd century B.C. onwards.

Zand

The Zand comprises of the explanations and commentaries of the Avesta compilations which were first written down in a cursive

Pahlavi script. Zand, therefore, is not a language as is commonly believed.

Pazand

The Pazand comprises of the explanations and commentaries of the Pahlavi texts which were written down in the newly formed Avestan script. The 46-letter Avestan alphabet was invented as late as the 5th century A.C. in Sasanian times. It is believed that the Avestan script was structured on the earlier polyphonic Pahlavi script.

The Avesta

Contents of the Avesta

The Avesta as it exists today, contains ceremonial liturgies, invocations to individual divinities, the "law against the demons" and various other supplementary prayers. It also includes some loosely connected rules for the conduction of liturgical services. A large portion of the Avesta is believed to have been lost to history; what remains is a complex collection of writings, which may be divided into a number of individual texts each complete in itself.

The Avesta in its present form may be classified into 5 divisions :

1. Yasna (which includes the Gāthās)
2. Yashts
3. Visperad
4. Vendidād
5. Khordeh Avesta

The Yasna :

The Yasna, which is the act of worship, consists of a series of invocations and oblations addressed and offered to all the divinities of the Zoroastrian pantheon, who are invoked in an hierarchical order. The Yasna is divided into 72 chapters, some of which are repetitive. The entire Yasna is recited in the Yasna (Guj. Ijashne) ceremony in which the sap of the pounded hōm twigs and pomegranate leaves

A portion of the Yasna compiled and written in the Avestan script (Reproduction of an undated, unaltered manuscript)

(Ph.urwarām) is extracted and mixed with goat's milk (Ph.jīwām) and consecrated well-water (Ph. āb zōhr). The main corpus of the Yasna is formed by the Staota Yesnya which begins with the Ahunavar prayer (Y.19) and ends with the Airyema Ishyō prayer which is recited immediately after the end of the fifth Gāthā (Y.53). The Gāthās are thus insulated to form the spiritual core of the Yasna ceremony.

The Yashts :

These are the hymns of praise devoted to the worship of individual divinities, the Yazatas, who are the "adorable beings worthy of worship" in the Zoroastrian pantheon. Many of the Yazatas have a day or month named in their honour.

The Yashts are recognized by their introduction and conclusion which are similar in style and syntax to each other. Each Yasht however, differs widely in age and content.

The Visperad :

The word Visperad comes from the Avestan word Visperatavō meaning "All the Lords". The Visperad is not an independent book, but it is a collection of supplements to the Yasna. The Visperad ceremony is performed with portions of the Yasna interspersed within it. There are 24 chapters (Av. kērēti) in the Visperad. Most of these chapters consist of formal invocations in the style of the Yasna. The Visperad is generally performed during the Gāhāmbār festivals and it contains expositions on the ritual portions of the Yasna.

The Vendidad :

The Vendidad ("The Law Against the Demons") is not a liturgical work. It is regarded as the Leviticus of the Parsis; that is, their ecclesiastical law book in which are specified in great detail the laws of purity, atonements for sins and religious penances. It also contains divergent material which includes the geography of the Avesta, laws against breach of contract, the importance of the dakhma, pollution by dead bodies, the importance of the dog, and priestly duties to be observed. The Vendidad is said to have formed the original 19th Nask of the Sasanid Avesta. As it exists today, it contains 22 chapters or fargards which are mostly in question-answer form.

4. D. Mackenzie, p 8.

The Khordeh Avesta :

The Khordeh Avesta or the Minor Avesta is a short extract from the entire Avesta. The Khordeh Avesta consists of :

1. The five Nyāishes, which are litanies in praise of the sun, light/contract, moon, water and fire.
2. The five gāhs or watches of the day.
3. The Sirozah, which contains two sets of minor and major invocations in honour of a pantheon of Zoroastrian divinities. Each invocation is addressed to the specific divinity of the day; there are three additional divinities—Burz, Hōm and Dahm—who are invoked on other occasions, making a total of 33 invocations in each set.
4. The Āfrīnagāns or blessings.

The editing of the Khordeh Avesta has been ascribed to Ādurbād ī Mahrspandān, during the reign of Shapur II (309-379 A.C.). The modern day Khordeh Avesta includes an amalgam of additional Avestan and Pahlavi prayers which are recited by the laity on different occasions.

Fragmentary Avestan Texts :

A few large fragments of writings, many incomplete in themselves, have been preserved.

1. Nīrangistān : It is an extensive exposition on the rituals of the Zoroastrian tradition.
2. The Nasks : It is known that the Avesta once consisted of 21 Nasks and the existing Avestan texts are a part of the original; only the Vendidad and the 3 fragments of the Hādokht Nask have survived independently.
3. Other Avestan fragments.

The Middle Persian Texts

The Middle Persian texts are a storehouse of information for any serious student of Zoroastrianism. The Pahlavi texts form an important link between early Zoroastrian thought and its subsequent development through the ages.

It is important to realize that the Middle Persian texts are full of abstract allegorical concepts and metaphors which, at times, are difficult to comprehend. However, one must try to grasp the underlying principles which lie behind the written word, in order that one may appreciate the continuity and richness of the faith and tradition.

Some of the Major Pahlavi Texts

Bundahishn : 6th century A.C.

The term Bundahishn, meaning creation, is applied to the Pahlavi work which relates to the cosmogony, cosmology, mythology and legendary history of the ancient Iranians. The fuller text is known as the Iranian Bundahishn or the Zand Āgāhīh, "knowledge from the Zand".

Dādestān-i-Mēnōg-i-Khrad : 6th century A.C.

This text ("Opinions of the Spirit of Wisdom") comprises of 62 questions which were asked to the Spirit of Wisdom on matters connected with the religion. The topics included the nature of wisdom, the creation of the world, the nature of truth, the 10 happiest and unhappiest lands, the 33 good works, the 30 cardinal sins and information on the best types of food, grain, fruit and wine.

Ardā Wirāz Nāmāg : final redaction in the 9th century A.C.

The Ardā Wirāz Nāmāg appears to have been initially compiled in ancient times; however, in its surviving form, it seems to be a work of the post Sasanian period. The righteous Wirāz, it is said, was temporarily transported in spirit "from the land of the living to the land of the dead". The spirit of Wirāz, for seven days and nights, made a grand tour of heaven and hell while his body was in a trance. During this journey, he saw the rewards and retributions meted out to the righteous and wicked souls in heaven and hell respectively. This text is popular and widely read by many Zoroastrians.

Zādspram : 9th century A.C.

The Zādspram was written by mobed Zādspram, the son of mobed Juwānjam. It deals with subjects similar to those in the Bundahishn and it also includes legends regarding Zarathushtra and his family, the omniscience of Wisdom, the nature of the evil spirit, the formation of men, and the renovation of the world at the end of time.

Dādestān-i-dīhīg : 9th century A.C.

This text ("Opinions of the Religion") was written by Manushchīhr, the brother of Zādspram and son of mobed Juwānjam, the high priest of Pars and Kerman. It comprises of 92 questions and answers about the faith. The answers given by Manushchīhr include a wide variety of topics like the expiation of sin, the importance of the sudreh, kūstī, adoption, guardianship, the role of priests and the doctrine of death, followed by the renovation of the world.

Epistles of Manushchīhr : 9th century A.C.

It seems that the above epistles (letters) were written by Manushchīhr to refute and rebuke the shortcuts and changes that his brother Zādspram wanted with regards to rituals. In the epistles, Manushchīhr ordered an immediate return to former customs and traditions.

Shkand-gumānīg Wīzār : 9th century A.C.

The Shkand-gumānīg Wīzār ("Doubt-dispelling explanation") is an excellent metaphysical treatise in which are tackled the fundamental concept of duality, the doctrine of good and evil, their separate origin and existence, and other philosophical issues, by a genius of his time—Mardānfarrokh i Ohrmazd dādān.

جای بر سر
کحل از باد و باران
که از ابرویم
بریزد کحل اندام
ندارد کس
درم کشته از
که با من همی
بکوشی و آید
از من رهنمایان
بایرانان کنج و
بخشد بدو نامه
نوداری همه لشکر
که نیکو زواید آسان
که هرگز نه منی زنی
همی بود بارش و
همی تاج و تخت کس
نشیند بخوبی و آرا
ز دانش برو بار
زمانه نکندی بخیر
بدو دل شیر آید
بسی شور و تلخی
کز این پرشم تلخ
بچنگیل پور و
سیارم بدو کینه و

مرا به اجرم ابرام
شب تیره جلیل شمس
ندام که عاشق کل آمد که
که داند که جلیل حکوید همی
همی نالد از مرکب سفید

سرو سدی نو آمد برید
کحل از ناله او سبب الهمی
چو بر کل نشیند شاید
بزرگیت خورشید فرما زوا
همی نالد از مرکب سفید

درم دارد و نقل و مان و طبع
بایر جلیل بنالد سسی
بخندد همی جلیل از هر دو
سرشت هر روز من شکو
همی نالد از مرکب سفید

خاک انکه دل نالد و دود
همه که بر لاله و سبیل است
ندام که ز کس حرا شد درم
درفشان شودش اندیش
ز جلیل سخن گفتن بکس

درم دارد و نقل و مان و طبع
بایر جلیل بنالد سسی
بخندد همی جلیل از هر دو
سرشت هر روز من شکو
همی نالد از مرکب سفید

Shāyest-nē-shāyest: 9th century A.C.

Shāyest-nē-shāyest meaning "the proper and improper" is a compilation containing miscellaneous laws and customs regarding sin and impurity, as well as it includes some information about religious ceremonies and basic Zoroastrian doctrine.

Dēnkard: 9th century A.C.

The Dēnkard ("The Acts of the Religion") is the longest extant Pahlavi work which was written by Ādur Farnbāg Farrokhzādān, and edited and enlarged by Ādurbād Emēdān. It contains a synopsis of the Zoroastrian religion during that period, together with a list comprising the whole of the Sasanid Avesta which was contained in the 21 Nasks. However the Dēnkard does contain certain eclectic religious beliefs which, it is said, derive their source from the early Platonic, Gnostic and Zurvanite schools.

The Shāhnāmē: 11th century A.C.

The Shāhnāmē ("Book of Kings") is an Iranian epic composed in verse form by the great Iranian Firdausi Tusi. He started his work in 975 A.C. and completed it in 1010 A.C. after having composed 45,000 lines of rhyming poetry in the Motoqareb meter. Firdaus derived his source and inspiration from Pahlavi chronicle called the Khwadāy Nāmāg — the book of Kings. In his poem he outlines the life and times of the mythical Pīshdādiān and the heroic Kayāniān dynasties. The latter part of his poem bears the stamp of historical veracity, after the advent of Alexander the Accursed. The poem is replete with rich imagery and stories which, if understood, gives one a deep insight into Iranian thought, history, literature and culture.

The Persian Rivāyats: 14th to 18th century A.C.

The Persian Rivāyats comprise of a collection of letters, treatise and messages of instruction given by the Iranian priests in reply to the questions asked by their counterparts in India mainly between the 15th and 17th centuries A.C. The Rivāyats cover a variety of topics including the doctrine, laws and the instructions incorporating ancient observances and rituals as practised by the Zoroastrian community in Iran. The most famous of the Rivāyats is the one compiled by Hormazyar Framarz, whose Rivāyats were translated into English by the great Parsi scholar, Ervad Bamanji N. Dhabhar, and published by the K. R. Cama Oriental Institute in 1932. In this edition, are also included the English translations (done by Ervad Dhabhar) of the Olmā-i-Islām, Bahman Yasht, Jāmāspi, Ahkān i Jāmāsp, Saddar Bundahesh and numerous other topics of interest.

A portion of the Shāhnāmē in the Persian language and script

چو با پور و شان برآید همی
بجا ما سب گفت از زمان شهر
که این کار را خوار مایه
اگر من سرخت شاهنشاهی