THE MEDICAL EMERGENCY

An 18-year-old young woman, Samaira Hosi Gocal, is currently fighting for her life in critical care. Her condition began suddenly with high fever, severe seizures, and confusion. Comprehensive medical investigations revealed NMDA Receptor Encephalitis, a rare autoimmune disorder where the immune system mistakenly attacks healthy brain tissue.

SURGERIES & COMPLEX COMPLICATIONS

Further diagnostics revealed an ovarian teratoma triggering the severe brain inflammation. Doctors performed an emergency laparoscopic surgery to remove the tumor, followed by a tracheostomy and high-dose immunotherapy. Subsequently, the patient developed severe pneumonia with lung consolidation, persistent high fever, and critically low blood oxygen levels.

CURRENT CONDITION: CRITICAL LIFE SUPPORT (ECMO)

Due to acute lung failure, standard mechanical ventilator support was no longer sufficient. An emergency escalation to ECMO (Extra-Corporeal Membrane Oxygenation) was initiated to oxygenate her blood outside the body, allowing her lungs crucial time to heal and recover.

WHY WE NEED YOUR SUPPORT

- Continuous ECMO & ICU Support: Round-the-clock life-support monitoring under strict specialist supervision.
- High-End Medications & Immunotherapy: Treatment requiring IVIG, Rituximab, advanced broad-spectrum antibiotics, and antifungal therapy.
- Extended Multi-Disciplinary Hospital Stay: Prolonged critical care managed jointly by Neurology, Pulmonology, and ICU teams.
